

Epea Pteroenta, Conveying Revelations of the Past (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Epea Pteroenta, Conveying Revelations of the Past Everything in ethnology is a balance between conflicting difficulties, and I can only hope that I have approached a full and complete exhibition of the ethnology of ancient Germany (Germ. 1851, p. iv.). If the early founders of the three great and leading states, Deutschland, England, and France, be not sufficiently recognised in that exhibition, it may be permitted to attempt, by way of supplement, an approach to greater fulness and completion. If the learned author had been aware that Tacitus mentions the Jutes along with the Angli, he would have been more positive about the latter, and less against the former; if he had cultivated a nearer acquaintance with the Franks, he might have discovered in them the mysterious Cimbri Teutones, instead of declaring these, in 1844, to be Gauls; in 1851 a greater mystery than ever (Germania, last page); if one of the two populations must be Gothic, the claim is the strongest for the Cimbri - so utterly worthless is the argument from the word Deutsch (ib., p. 135). Again, in 1857, the Teutones, a population of which we find no definite trace afterwards (Celt. Nations, p. 142), and the Cimbri more likely to have been Kelts than Germans, and quite as likely to have been Slavonians as Kelts (ib.) I think that the Cimbri were Slavonians. That they had as little to do with the Cimbric Chersonese as the Teutones had with Dutch, I am sure (ib. p.151).About the PublisherForgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
